Let's look at the big picture...

Overview of what you will learn

Wouldn't it be lovely if we could snap our fingers and Voila! things – just – happen? In the real world, it doesn't work that way. Organisations have to use projects to drive change, step-by-carefully-planned-and-implemented-step.

Projects are how organisations make things happen. They process and deliver the changes that improve services to customers and increase organisational and operational effectiveness.

Graduate School

This short course will give you a broad understanding of project management, taking you through the cycle of a project (from conception to completion) and the requirements needed at each stage. You'll explore a range of tools, techniques and standards developed by professional organisations for effective project management and you'll take a look at your own organisation's project implementation process. With a focus on the harder skills required in project management, you'll master the practical capabilities necessary to define, create, plan, implement, control and complete a project successfully.

Because employees in all types of roles participate in projects, this course is suitable for people across the workforce. So, if you're new to project management and wanting to lead or to contribute to projects more effectively, this course is for you. It's presented by The Open University, a UK-based online learning and research university and an industry leader in executive education and upskilling the workforce. Their ultimate goal is to be world leaders in the design, content and delivery of supported open learning.

How about making your next project personal... You! Sign up, invest in yourself and learn to implement change personally and professionally with the IMM Graduate School.
